CURATORIAL DESCRIPTION

Against a near-black ground, a saturated coral-pink movement enters with force: splashed, poured, flicked and dragged across the surface. The marks read as impact, acceleration and pulse - an instant made physical.

Threading through that heat are cooler baby sky blue lines: lighter, sharper and almost calligraphic. They cross, interrupt and redirect the pink, building a tension between instinct and structure, eruption and control.

At a distance, the composition feels explosive. At close range, the surface becomes more intricate, revealing changes in texture, density, overlap, irregular edges and the physical depth of the paint.

Surface is evidence.

01 RAISED PIGMENT

The coral-pink passages carry tactile variation, catching light differently across the painted surface.

02 INTERRUPTED LINE

Baby sky blue strokes cross, break and rejoin, creating an architectural counterpoint within the broader gesture.

03 NEAR-BLACK GROUND

The dark field functions as negative space and depth, intensifying the apparent luminosity of the coral-pink movement.
